Oppose

Explanation:

The Animal Law Section is opposed to this effort to encourage the US Fish and Wildlife Service to delist gray wolves. Scientists and scholars with expertise on this issue have urged the USFWS to keep gray wolves on the endangered species list. While their numbers have recovered somewhat, scientists note that they only occupy 15% of their original range and delisting them now could jeopardize the recovery and stability of the species. Further, this resolution ignores the will of Michigan voters, who voted against the wolf hunt on two separate occasions in 2014.
